NOW FOR OUR SEMI-ANNUAL Clean Up Sale

Out with all remaining Summer goods—even at a sacrifice is the watchword now! But dependable goods—nothing inferior.

The frugal Women of Bridgeport always hail the announcement of this Sale with acclaim—because, experience has taught them, that it is the one real value giving event of the season. This assertion is fully substantiated by the offerings themselves—columns of type can give you an inkling of the savings offered—but the sureness and certainty of the saving can only be realized by attending the Sale. Attend! It will pay you to do so.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR
M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead

"I would have won them over if Britt had not interfered," almost Genevra gently waved her handkerchief, walled little Mr. Saunders, his eyes glazed with mortification.

"I'm getting to hate that man," said Miss Pelham loyally. "And the others!
They give me a pain! Don't mind them, Tommy, dear."

Lady Deppingham and Browne came upon the princess quite unexpectedly.
She was in the upper gallery, leaning against the stone rail and gazing steadily through the fieldglasses in the direction of the bungalow. They held back and watched her, unseen.
The soft light of early evening fell upon her figure as she stood erect, lithe and sinuous, in the open space between the ivy clad posts.

Genevra smiled securely in her supposed absence from the world. Then suddenly moved by a strange impulse, she gently waved her handkerchief as if in greeting to some one far off in the gloaming. The action was a mischievous one, no doubt, and it had its consequences—rather sudden and startling, if the observers were to judge by her subsequent movements. She lowered the glass instantly. There was a quick catch in her breath, as if a laugh had been checked; confusion swept over her, and she drew back into the shadows as a guilty child might have done. They distinctly heard her murmur as she crossed the flags and disappeared through the French window without seeing them:

"Oh, dear, what a crazy thing to do!" Genevra, peering through the glasses, had discovered the figure of Chase on the bungalow porch. She was amused to find that he, from his distant post, was also regarding the chateau through a pair of glasses. A spirit of adventure, risk, mischief, as uncontrolled as breath itself, impelled her to flaunt her handkerchief. That treacherous spirit deserted her most shamelessly when her startled eyes saw that he was waving a response. She awoke for a long time that night wondering what he would think of her for that wretched bit of frivolity. Then at last a new thought came to her relief, but it did not give her the peace of mind that she desired.

He may have mistaken her for Lady

* CHAPTER XIV.

TWO CALLS FROM THE ENEMY.
DEPPINGHAM was up and about quite early the next morning—that is, quite early for him.
He had his rolls and coffee and strolled out in the shady park for a smoke. The princess, whose sense of humiliation had not been lessened by the fitful sleep of the night before, was walking in the shade of the trees on the lower terrace, beyond the fountains and the artificial lake.

"I was thinking of you," she said in greeting as he came up.

"How nice you are," he said. "But, my dear, it is wise in you to be thinking of us handsome devils! It's a most dangerous habit—thinking of other men."

"But, Deppy, dear, the prince isn't here," she said, falling into his humor. "That makes quite a difference, doesn't it?"

"Your logic is splendid. Pray resume your thoughts of me—if they were pleasant and agreeable. I'll not blow on you to Karl. By the way, I have a compliment for you. Browne says your hair is more beautiful than Pong's. That's quite a compliment.
Titan never even dreamed of hair like Pong's."

"How nice you are," she said, with a pout. "I am very unhappy about my hair. It is quite red. I don't see why I should have hair like that of a red cock. It seems so animalish."

"Rubbish! Why should you complain? Look at my hair. It's been likened more than once to that of a Jersey cow."

"Oh, how I adore Jersey cows! Now, I wouldn't mind that a bit."

"I trust I am not intruding," Chase said as he came up. His gaze was as much for Deppingham as for the princess, his remark quite impersonal.

"Not at all, not at all," she said, with an ingenuous smile, which would have disarmed Chase if he had been prepared for anything else. As a matter of fact, he had approached her in the light of an adventurer who expects nothing and grasps at straws.

"In the dark ages," said he so re-fully that her smile grew. He had come, in truth, to ascertain why her husband had not come with her.

"But not the forgotten variety, I fancy," said Deppingham shrewdly.

It would be impossible for the princess to forget the greatest of all fools," said Chase.

"He was no worse than other mortals," said she.

"Thank you," said Chase. Then he turned to Lord Deppingham. "My dear, requires some explanation. Lord Deppingham. You have said that I am unneighborly. No doubt you appreciate my reasons. One has to respect appearances," with a dry smile.

"When one is in doubt he must do as the Moslems do, especially if the Moslems don't want him to do as he wants to do."

"No doubt you're right, but it sounds a bit harsh," murmured Deppingham. "Lady Deppingham will be delighted to see you. Are you ready to come in, princess?"

They started toward the chateau, keeping well in the shade of the boxed trees, the princess between the two men.

"I say, Chase, do you mind relieving my fears a bit? With all due respect to your estimable clients, it occurs to me that they are likely to break over the traces at any moment and raise the very old Harry at somebody else's expense. I'd like to know if my head is really safe."

"I came to see you in regard to that very thing, Lord Deppingham. I don't want to alarm you, but I do not like the appearance of things. They don't trust me and they hate you—quite naturally. I'm rather sorry that our British man-of-war is out of reach. Pray don't be alarmed, princess. It is most improbable that anything evil will happen. And, in any event, we can hold out against them until relief comes."

"We?" demanded Deppingham.

"Certainly. If it comes to an assault of any kind upon the chateau I trust that I may be considered as one of you. I won't serve assassins and bandits at least not after they've got beyond my control. Besides, if the worst should come they won't discriminate in my favor."

"Why do you stay here, Mr. Chase?" asked the princess. "You admit that they do not like you or trust you.
Why do you stay?"

KILLS RATTLER ON LAWN.

Norfolk, July 23.—While on the front stoop at the old Munson farmhouse on Canaan Mountain near Lake Wampantucket Tuesday evening, Augustus Munson, who is nearly 30 years of age, espied a rattlesnake crawling about on his lawn. Assistance was unnecessary to the aged gentleman, who secured a club and promptly dispatched the rattler. The snake was found to be nearly four feet long and carried seven rattles and a button. Other farmers on Canaan Mountain report an unusual number of these snakes this year.

ADVERTISE IN THE FARMER

Suffragists Preparing

To Startle New York

New York, July 23.—They are getting ready for business at the new suffrage headquarters. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the National President, will be here in a few days, and other National officers are already in the city. They came for a conference with the State President, Mrs. Ella Hawley Crosscut, of Warsaw; Miss Harriet May Mills of Syracuse, the Vice President; also the State Auditor, Mrs. Henry Villard, who comes in daily from Thorwood, her country home at Tarrytown. Mrs.
Oliver H. P. Belmont is down from Newport.

The nine rooms are ready for occupancy and the officers are consulting as to furnishings and plans of work.
They expect that everything will be in order by Sept. 1, and say that there will be the liveliest time this Winter that New York has ever seen in the line of woman suffrage. Mrs. Belmont has many ideas and is planning some suffrage affairs at Newport in August.

Everyone would be benefitted by taking Foley's Orino Laxative for stomach and liver trouble and habitual constipation. It sweetens the stomach and regulates the bowels and is much superior to pills and ordinary laxatives.
Why not try Foley's Orino Laxative to-day? F. B. Brill, local agent. *125
